This is the same section of Commercial Wharf and the South Shore which appears in the picture on page 7 as it is now with the Church Tower on Orange Street unchanged, still overlooking the harbor.

This is the corner of Commercial Wharf and the South Shore as it appeared in the 1880's. You will note that at the far left is the large building which is now Harbor View, and also the Candle House, both in their original locations. We have been able to use this picture through the kindness of Mr. Donald Craig.

Getting Old and Feeble

—AND—

GOING TO DUST.

Having been politely invited to vacate the store
I have complied several years, I have come to the conclusion to leave and wind up the business. I am getting on very well, but I have no time to spend in the care of my stock. I would say I shall sell everything I have got in my store, at one price or another, and then leave the country. This is indeed it is business. Everything will be sold if anybody will buy.I have got a new lot of Cook and Parlor stoves, as good as can be found on the Island. They will be sold at reduced prices; also, I shall sell my horses
and five carriages, consisting of one family horse,
three harness, two broughams, one box wagon,
one truck wagon and one Express wagon.

equipment to complete this exhibit from our Whaling Museum. Mr. W. Ripley Nelson, chairman of the Whaling Museum, promptly responded to this request and among other articles some of our most interesting charts were shipped to Houston. The Nantucket Whaling Museum is only one of several New England Museums and Institutions represented in the Houston Exhibition.

La Libraires Associes, Club des Libraires de France, wrote early in the year requesting copies of the old photographs used by Mr. William F. Macy in his "Story of Old Nantucket", for a "nouvelle edition de 'Arthur Gordon Pym'". We presume they are referring to Edgar Allan Poe's, "Narrative of A. Gordon Pym", which he then wirted and story taken out of Nantucket being a unfortunate one in Whaling. Although the latter does not add a lot. We forwarded the several photographs which were large they may be added for use.

The wreck of the two-masted schooner "Ravola" came ashore in December, 1916, and lay east of the Great Point lighthouse for many years, recently moving around the Point and coming to rest on the inside near the end. It was set on fire last summer and burned inside the timbers all fall, until very little was remaining.

Plus Pégase and Marthe Poulin will be illustrating the other exhibits. "Pégase" will be illustrating the "Marine Environment" and "Marine Resources and Conservation International". The ng for a General Assembly in May 1703, has been presented to the Nantucket Historic Trust.

A MONUMENT on the battlegrounds of Guilford Courthouse, North Carolina, reads: "To Peter Francisco, a giant in stature, might, and courage, who slew in the engagement eleven of the enemy with his own broadsword, rendering himself, thereby, perhaps the most famous private soldier of the Revolutionary War."

The man who earned this unusual tribute was a mere lad when he arrived in this country from Portugal, by way of Ireland, to begin a new life here as a bond servant. He became a freeman when he enlisted in the ranks of the Revolutionary Army, at the age of 16, to fight for his adopted country.

Old records preserve the comments of his comrades who witnessed his might as a soldier in such battles as Brandywine, Germantown, and Monmouth. Other accounts note that he was an equally memorable figure in private life. He was an industrious and temperate man and an unfailing champion of the weak and the unprotected.

He served the House of Delegates in Virginia faithfully, as its Sergeant-at-Arms, until his death on January 16, 1831. He is remembered not only as the "Hercules of the Revolution" but also as one of the first of the many rank and file soldiers of all our hard fought wars who have distinguished
